

National History Day Written Materials

Annika Balaji & Aanya Garg

Process Paper

Topic

Both of us have an Indian background, and wanted to embrace our culture. Mahatma Gandhi is arguably one of the most iconic figures from India. We were fascinated by his non violent protests, and wanted to learn more about them and share the information that we would learn with others, as well as inspire our community.

Research

We conducted our research by writing many questions about our topic, dividing them up among ourselves and doing research to answer them. We formulated these questions after doing general research on our topic. Our sources were a mixture of databases, websites, and books. We wrote our information using a google doc and the notecard feature on Noodle Tools. We also researched Gandhi's peaceful protests around the world as a whole.

Creation of Our Project

We both have a knack for theatre. So, we decided to make a performance. First, we laid out our arguments in a clear manner, so we knew the general direction in which we were going. Next, we had to decide a plot so we had a clear understanding of what we needed to write and what we needed to research more on. After laying out our argument and plot. We then formulated the personalities and roles of our characters so we could write a script with the right tones. Next, we got to writing the script. This was arguably the hardest part of the project. It was quite a struggle, and many late nights to finally get a script which successfully portrayed the characters personalities, supported our arguments, kept the plot interesting and kept our project related to the theme of communication. After completing the script, we had to proofread, and polish it and then rehearse it. We then filmed our skit. The first part of filming the skit was staging. We chromecasted a google slides presentation to project our backgrounds onto the projector screen. The living room background was found on pixabay, which are free stock images which don't need to be cited. The pictures of the 1906 South Africa protest and Salt March were found on informational webpages and were cited. The soccer field background was created by us on Procreate. To film our performance, we stacked many boxes on top of each other, and placed the recording device on top.

Relation to the Theme

Over the centuries many different people have communicated their beliefs in many different ways, some much more violent than others. Our topic is about how Mahatma Gandhi and his many supporters communicated their beliefs about British rule in India in a peaceful, non violent manner.

This personal interview with Rajeev Verma, who was growing up when India became independent helped us learn more about what people thought of Gandhi and helped us gain the growing child's perspective on the Indian Independence Movement.
